New Oddity For Paris - Overcoats For Wine Bottles

CREDIT for the latest fad in the French capital goes to an aged Roman woman who has lived in Paris since the revolutionists took things over in her native land.

The little tea pot jackets that the English use.

most address of the wine warmers mistake this figure for a woman, but the Russian woman who designed it says it's a monk.

Because this who warmer is called "The Devil," it is suspected that the face is a good likeness of some acquaintance of the artist who made the clever gadget.

The jackets and begged her to make some for them. One person told another and it wasn't long before the Russian woman had orders for more of the things than she could make if she worked night and day for months.

A Handbag That Takes Pictures

FOR the past year or two cameras have been getting smaller and, picture-takers say, better. The camera for so-called "snaps" camera pictures has spread from Europe to the country and the newspapers and magazines are full of informal shots of political personages that members of the fashionable set snapped unaware and others who for no reason or another, are unwittingly.

One of the most and most ingenious versions of the small camera is shown in the photograph at the right. The pretty young woman is holding the new handbag with a tiny camera fitted in the top where the clasp ordinarily is placed.

The picture-taking mechanism weighs only a few ounces but it is complete, with bellows, finder, high-speed shutter and all the other items necessary to the taking of pictures.

The camera is about the same color as the leather of the handbag and might easily be overlooked by the subject for some "snaps" portraits. The innovation is, of course, recommended for travelers bound for far places where there are strange sights to be seen. Maids and waitresses have to carry handbags anyway and with this invention, it isn't necessary to take a standard camera along in order to get pictures.

The handbag camera are said to be popular among the social stars in Hollywood who have caught some amusing, not to say amusing, informal pictures of their celebrated "friends" taking snapshots of themselves in their time away from the studio and even while they are at work on the sound stages of the country's cinema capital.

Where Jaywalkers Are Horsewhipped

CITIZENS of the mining town of Dupont, Pennsylvania, are going to behave themselves or get into trouble with the law. A year or so ago the community got a lot of publicity because it found drunk to drive, strolling in the streets or as the price of their overindulgence in alcohol.

Full of jaywalkers who pay no attention to red lights and green ones, and who have a way of strolling in front of cars as though they were inviting drivers to hit them.

The official warned the horse-whippers that he would visit with the police in Dupont and bring an old-fashioned horse-whip with him. The whip, he promised, would be applied to their persons to register on their minds that jaywalking is a dangerous business in this day when the highways and by-ways are heavy with traffic.

"We make careless and reckless drivers too," he said, "and we've got to be just as firm with pedestrians."

Cleaver Scheme to 'Tame' Wild Horses

MUCH of the swashbuckling activity that made the "West" about the most colorful section of this country has gone with the passing of the frontier. The automobile and the airplane have outdone the stage-coach and, to a considerable extent, the bronco.

For many years, especially in southern Nevada, cowboys have staged roundup to capture these footloose horses and ship them off to ignominious ends at various slaughter houses. The horses eat up a lot of grass that might better serve to feed cattle with a market value, and unless their numbers were reduced they would multiply rapidly.

"Hello, what's this?" Peter Finds an Open Bottle of Ale and Proceeds to Lap Out a Sample to See What the Stuff Tastes Like.

"Might as well finish the bottle. My master drinks it, and if it's good enough for him, it's good enough for me."

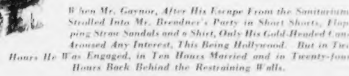

"Wow! Whatever it is, it's got a kick in it. Guess I'll just rest here awhile until the world gets spinning around."

Why Peter the Pup Went on the Water Wagon

THE London branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals won't have to look into the case of a wire-haired terrier answering to the name of Peter because this curious pup has decided that he doesn't like ale.

His feet just wouldn't behave and, after a series of nose dives he just trying to walk upright and rolled over on his back until the effects of the brew wore off.

Firstly, played tennis, and tennis and beat her, and played her at tennis and beat her again. They had cocktails together, and it was long time before she was just as the Hollywood scenarios would have arranged it for the movies.

Obviously, her husband, a handsome, tall, thin, dark man, was not planning for Reggie, too much time could not be taken up in preliminaries. So in two hours, so persuasive was she, she had secured a room, a dress, a blouse, a skirt and a pair of slippers and the inconspicuous gold-banded case, Anne Parnell's.

"But we must get married right away," he said, not telling her why, however. "I'll charter a plane and we'll fly down to Tucson, Arizona, where wait many people in a hurry. Just wait till I borrow a pair of pants,

Of course, no movie would end as unhappily, with the bridegroom still in the sanitarium. And so Reggie and Shirley Anne's romance kept true to the plot. Reggie was released from the sanitarium a few weeks later as cured, and is with Anne in Seattle. It is even said that his family is coming around to acceptance of his bride.

So maybe when this is read, Reggie and Anne will have set forth on that trip to the Orient, after all. Or just as likely they may have parted and started still another familiar movie plot.

"Masterpiece" Of A Charwoman, Inspired By A Saint

Anna Marton's Inspired Conception of Thorne's Mummy, One of the Many Non-Bellington Paintings Shown at the Exhibition. The Artist Is Told What to Paint, She Says, by Saint Theresa, Her Patron.

FOR more than thirty years Anna Marton was content to scrub floors and do such menial work as she could get. Lacking even a grammar school education, she is simple of speech and calm and writes only the common vernacular of her native tongue. Yet today the machine charwoman, famous all over Hungary, and art critic in every European country are singing her praise as a genius.

Part of the Charm School Course in San Diego Is "How to Get Your Man," and the Pretty Young Pupils Use This Sacred Mummy to Develop Their Technique.

they are bought by admirers of her work faster than she can turn them out.

It was only a few short months ago that Anna Marton rose out of poverty and obscurity as the result of an exhibition of her pictures in a modest gallery in Budapest Square. This gallery never is used for hanging the work of well-known artists or painters with formal training. Its walls are reserved for the pictures of laborers, peasant farmers, while vulgar folk who never have been inside an art school. All those who are permitted to show their work in this gallery automatically become members of the so-called Magyar (Hungarian)—the Hungarian Primitive Painters.

A few days after the picture of Anna Marton were displayed in this little gallery artists and art critics were knocking at the door of her little home. Reporters from newspapers and magazines were seeking her, too, to get the story behind her work.

The story is even stranger than the pictures, and although many people smile at it, the peasant artist insists that it's true. That she sits down before her easel and waits until Saint Theresa guides her work.

The good saint does my painting for me," she says, "and when I have finished a picture I look at it and wonder how I ever did it. I enjoy looking at the picture as much as if someone else had painted it, and I have the feeling that I never have seen it before."

More than a few people are willing to accept this explanation, because the ex-charwoman's pictures subjects about which she knows little or if anything, for example, she is ignorant of the history of Egypt, and yet some of her best "masterpieces" are shown at the extreme left of the page—in a little "Throne and the Mummy." Just what

This Represents the "Throne and the Mummy's Vision," According to the Peasant Artist, Who Rins Now and Then to Egyptian Motifs.

There Is a Religious Significance to This One, Which Purports to Show "The Decoration of the Earth and the Mediterranean," but It Is a Bit More Symbolical Than Another Painting, of an Ostroch and a Woman's Skirt, Strangely Associated.

the painting means even Anna Marton can't say. All she knows is that the subject appeared clear and complete in her mind and all she had to do was translate the vision in colors almost starting for their brilliance. The country's other "primitive geniuses" prefer not to take too much stock in the St. Theresa story, because they want all the credit for the paintings to go to one of their untutored colleagues.

The big picture in the center of the page is called "Throne and the Mummy's Vision." This is a sort of sequel to the conception of "Throne and the Mummy" and is hard to make anything of, although some of the abstract of Hungarian artists admit that they can't take their eyes off the canvas because it is an unusual example of strong and harmonious color. Perhaps the most mystifying of the charwoman's subjects is the one reproduced at the extreme right of the page.

What Relationship May Exist Between a Comet and a Woman Spy Remains a Secret in the Mind of the Charwoman, but the Title of This Exciting Scene Is "The Comet and the Woman Spy."

She calls it "The Comet and the Woman Spy." Just what one of those flaming sky travelers has to do with international intrigue is a puzzle that even the artist's most ardent admirers can't solve. They do know that the picture is strangely moving and that to some of the country's most eminent critics has seemed "important." The artist's opinion of color in this canvas are startling to everyone who looks upon it. Blood red swirls over daubs of pitch black. Cool atmospheric blues are accented with splashes of lemon yellow. And beneath this riot of pigment the woman spy lies dead, sleeping or transfixed with fear.

It may well be that Anna Marton believes that her pictures are inspired by a saint, because, although she's been poor and unknown for more than thirty years of life, she doesn't seem much interested in the acclaim, or the money, that her work brings her.

The Next "Leg Society" Helps Business at the Beach

At Margate, England, the Customers Are Just About Tripled This Year Because of the Organization of a "Leg Society," Admitting Only Young Women with Shapely Calves and Ankles, Who Provide Such Spectacles as That Shown Above.

SOME of the solid citizens of Margate, England, aren't quite sure whether the imaginative men who are promoting a big boom at the watering place are going about the job right. These same citizens take a realistic attitude toward the economic aspects of the situation, and are pleased that this season the community has attracted about three times as many visitors as in any year since the World War. They are judging more shillings and pence in their pockets than they ever expected to have again—but the means to the end causes a few of them to shake their heads.

The boys behind the boom took a look at Margate and its seaside attractions and decided that what the place needed was more and shapelier girls. They didn't go to the trouble of making a formal report to the local Chamber of Commerce, but they said, in effect, "All the place with good-looking members of the fair sex and everything will be all right."

The next step was the formation of an organization dubbed "The Margate Leg Society." The outfit came into existence without benefit of charter, by-law or membership cards. The only requirement was that members have, or imagine they have, legs well-proportioned and good to look upon.

The photograph at the left shows one of the frequent meetings of the society, which, of course, never are held in secret, but along the main thoroughfares of the seaside resort, where non-participants can appreciate the charms of the "leg society" while inhaling the refreshing salt air and soaking up the beneficent rays of the sun.

After the first meeting of the "Leg Society"—which was attended by newspaper and personal cameramen—business began to pick up. At a wasn't any time before every train and boat pulling into Margate was loaded with customers. Some of them were potential members of the society, but most of them were spectators with money in their pockets for hot-dogs, hamburgers, bath houses and boat rides. The tills of Margate shops and stalls began to tinkle pleasantly.

No one with a stake in Margate's business success fuses such about the coin in its unity "Leg Society."

Practical Get Them

IN ONE of the buildings of the San Diego Exposition stands the country's largest and most comprehensive pen—a stick-barred, hand-made cage worthy an Alphonse.

Not long since a score of the greatest girls on the Pacific Coast spent several hours a day for a week to make money for Alphonse. These young women were, according to the press stories turned out by the exposition's imaginative and expert publicity department, people at a "Charm School." They laid down in the pen in the position of love-making and all succeeded in passing their examinations in such subjects as "grace," "smile" and "outdoors."

Even if the "Charm School" was primarily a publicity stunt intended to attract people to the exposition, it had its virtues for there are many young women who are awkward in the attitude of romance. The school gave them a chance to improve their technique without the danger of any implied reaction by the party of the second part. Most of the people admitted that they felt much freer with Alphonse than they ever could have with a human subject. They could not as much regret and into their own making as they wished, and they would not the slightest danger that the "man" receiving their tender affection would fear being hurt or get personal.

"Charm School" are not so numerous on the other side of the Atlantic. Several years ago one Prudence Latimer, who called herself "Prudence," operated a school of such instruction—one in France, one in England and a couple in Italy.

"Prudence" Latimer may or may not have and men of wax in some of her classes, but she encouraged her scholars to meet few men of remarkable quality, in the sense of Ulysses. He was careful in the selection of the gentlemen, etc. If a man always conducted himself with decorum, but, immediately rejected their work as subjects for the application of the latent charms, but occupying and perfecting feminine charms.

Music From Ribs of Prehistoric Monsters

IT MIGHT seem off-hand, that tickling the ribs of a rhinoceros that went down to extinction some twenty million years ago would be a dull and pointless bit of business. But that's exactly what the fellows in the photograph at the right are doing. His name is Henry Reider and he's a member of the University of Nebraska Museum staff.

Mr. Reider is trying his hand at one of the latest "swing" tunes on a sort of xylophone fashioned of ribs of a prehistoric rhinoceros that was dug up near Ainsworth, Nebraska. The strange instrument is so made that it has two complete octaves, including all the sharp and flats.

It was in easy job picking just the right bones to make each note of the musical scale. The ribs had to be of the proper thickness and length and assembled in the correct sequence.

No one who has listened to selections on the "bonephone" has been especially impressed with the quality of its music. The old bones do not ring with bell-like tones, nor have they the resonance of seasoned wood. But they do clank with more or less fidelity, the familiar "prehistoric" and a skilled xylophonist can manage to do a pretty good job on the gadget.

One of the officials of the museum explained that the ribs that make up the old musical instrument belonged to some monster that wandered about what is now Nebraska and Kansas during what geologists call the Miocene period. During this era, covering about fifteen million years, thousands of rhinos roamed the North American Continent. Some of them had horns and some of them didn't. Some of them were small and others were big brutes that probably were capable of holding their own with the other ponderous and alpine creatures that bossed the earth in that distant day.

The sandy soil of Kansas and Nebraska has yielded enough bones to show that rhinos were common here long before the first white men set foot on the Western World. Some of the fossil beds held so many bones that the scientists have been led to assume that the species went down to extinction during a comparatively short period of time. Probably in one severe season, when the beasts couldn't get enough to eat or drink, they gathered in great herds and died from hunger, thirst and exhaustion.

The bones in the University of Nebraska's xylophone are surprisingly sound for their age.

Barnum built a huge home in Bridgeport, Conn., and operated a farm in connection with it. As a publicity stunt he shipped an elephant to the farm, with its trainer, and hitched the beast to a plow. One of the showman's fields paralleled the railroad track, and, armed with a train schedule, the trainer plowed the field industriously every time a train passed. The sight of an elephant hitched in a plow caused so much comment that newspapers all over the world carried the story.

On one occasion a spectator, Mr. William Charr, dragged Barnum into court, declaring he had been hoaxed and that Barnum's Bearded Lady was nothing but a man dressed in woman's clothing. The court was packed for the several days of the hearing when Barnum, by the testimony of doctors and the father and the husband and the son of the bearded lady proved that she was at least a woman, lady or not. Keene, Texas, a Real "Spotless Town"

Artist's Conception of the Imaginative Spotless Town of Twenty Years Ago, Where Everything Spiritual and Material Was Spotlessly Pure.

Peaceful Life Where No Shop Sells and Nobody Uses Rouge or Lipstick, Nobody Drinks Tea or Coffee, Where No Meat Is Eaten, There Are No Movies, Women Wear No Jewelry and Fiction Magazines Are Not Sold

Sports, Games and Contests Are Not Encouraged in Keene. But the Youngsters Are Allowed to Ride Bicycles.

Airplane View Showing a Portion of Keene, Texas, Where Nothing Naughty Is Said, or Done, or Eaten.

"SPOTLISS TOWN" was an alluring phrase invented several years ago by an imaginative advertiser of a popular soap. But it applied to the streets and sidewalks and the houses of the people. And from there it spread to the whole town, where every man, woman and child is of tried and true, as spotless in morals and conduct as the angels and the white robes and the white wings of the juvenile picture books.

Keene, Texas, a town of 400 inhabitants, has no jail, no police, no mayor, no judge, no courts, no divorce, no known cases of infidelity and has had no crime of any kind in all its forty-two years except one, when a half-witted boy stole a few things. There is never a strike, a fight, a homicide, an insanity, a suicide, or a profane word uttered. The only case of drunkenness remembered by the oldest inhabitants happened during the war when two soldiers staggered into town and had no time to stagger out again. During all the depression only one old man and one old woman asked for charity. Yet in that town only one man gets better than $25 a week.

But to reach the state of this model spotlessness the people of Keene have had to give up so many of the things pleasure and put themselves under such severe discipline. That the town of Keene, only eight miles away from the slightest temptation to follow the neighborly fifty example.

Some of the restrictions are no more than anyone would expect of stern moralists, none anywhere, but others would be something of a shock even to the most pious and upright. It is no surprise that the "demon rum" was outlawed from the start but tobacco, in any form, is considered equally sinful. People who are prohibitionists and also anti-tobacco sometimes drop into the little town, expecting to find a congenial atmosphere, but are pained to learn that tea and coffee, are equally wicked and forbidden. In the town's only restaurant the choice is water or milk. The stranger who asks for a cup of coffee attracts as much horrified attention as if he had asked for a skull of mutton. Tea and coffee are nothing but for sale in the stores but used in the houses. Vegetarians approved the spotless town's latest in meat and a few who were also against alcohol, tobacco, tea and coffee dropped in, sure that they were in a most congenial atmosphere. Their enthusiasm cooled when they found the various vegetables, dishes strangely flavorless and upon asking for pepper, learned that it was as forbidden as liquor and so were all the other spices. The only savory permitted is salt.

Not a lipstick, eyebrow pencil, an ounce of rouge, face powder, finger-nail enamel or polish exists in Keene, though dark white and super-fine talcum powder for babies is for sale. The amount can drive over to Cleburne and buy all they want of these wicked things but they don't because it would be useless. If a woman so much as showed a beautiful face at her window, she would be frowned upon by the Council of the Seventh Day Adventist (which is the absolute dictator of the little town). Frowns would be heaped and if she showed due repentance her sin would be forgiven the first time. Otherwise she would be advised to leave town and people so advised find it wise to obey, though they know force will not be used.

On the other hand the authorities are lenient about hair, permitting women of all ages to wear it long or bobbed. Some cults even forbid the men to trim beards, but the rules of Keene can and do shave. One lone beauty parlor exists in the town where women may have a man's or a woman's wave, without shame or expense, but on no account have their eyebrows plucked.

Anyone who wants to open a jewelry store in "Spotless Town" will have a monopoly on the business, but no customers, because all visible and decorative jewelry, except wrist watches, are forbidden as marks of the devil. Gambling is against the law in many places but probably nowhere on earth is the anti-gambling principle carried so far. Playing cards are as unlawful as whiskey because though it might do no harm for some old pillar of the church, full of years and inclined to while away an hour or two playing solitaire, this "invention of Satan" might fall into the hands of the children and be regarded as dangerous, like having a loaded gun around. But there is the same temptation to gamble on dominoes, little backgammon or any other game on which one might bet, so these too are outlawed. So, too, are marbles for children.

But "Spotless Town" goes even further than that. Keene is a college town, but no college exists here. The reason for this is no stadium for the reason that no football, baseball, track or other competitive, organized games are permitted. Somebody might gamble on them. The people of Keene know all about students coming home with empty pockets when their football team loses, which is bad, and full of illegal gains when the team wins, which is worse.

For these reasons no baseball bats or gloves are seen in Keene and even gloves, horse shoes and most any other form of sporting competition, are frowned on. Yet the hosts of the right-athletes were forced to make one concession to the "evil of competition" by permitting a reasonable amount of tennis.

Dancing being forbidden by many other cults, it is no surprise that it is here also. With so many other forms of amusement cut out, the people of Keene might be expected to have an abnormal amount of leisure for movies, vaudeville and the legitimate theatre. Not at all. There are none of these things in town and no posters of the actors in other towns are permitted within the boundaries of "Spotless Town."

It may seem harsh but it is logical. What would be the effect on the shielded and restrained youth if they saw on the screen men and women, some aggliter with jewels smoking and drinking, playing cards, eating meat, using pepper and going to horse races? The news-reels would be still worse. Even if the President of the United States and other big dignitaries were not shown smoking, or their wives wearing jewelry, they are likely to be doing something sinful like attending the first baseball game of the season, and even throwing out the first ball. As for modern plays most of them are so bad that even the big cities are ashamed of them.

Young Men's College Dormitory. Tobacco, Liquor, Dice, Cards, or Fiction Magazines Never Enter These Student Quarters.

Logically, the same sort of objections apply to the radio, but here again righteousness being in the minority, has had to compromise with the evil majority. Radio sets are permitted to be sold and used but under the strictest supervision. Only a few of the most innocent programs are permissible for ears of old or young. Music is the hardest problem because while classical music is all right, jazz is as wicked in Keene, Texas, as it was until recently in irreligious Soviet Russia.

Children have to get the permission of some responsible elder who looks over the radio page in the paper and tells them just what they may tune in. The moment that jazz or any other evil sounds begin to pollute the air, the children know they must tune them out instantly. They are faithful about this because they know that some group is listening.

No organized sports, no dancing, theatre, card parties, and very little radio, leaves the natives of "Spotless Town" with almost no recreation but reading. This is supposed to be the ideal thing for young men and women but the Seventh Day Adventists found it one of their toughest problems. Most modern novels and every one of the fiction magazines are forbidden to enter the town, on the ground that they are "wicked trash." Though they consider the newspapers almost as bad, it is readable that since most news, these papers are bad news, the papers can't be blasted for printing it and the people of Keene must have some idea of the seventh things even if they are mostly readings. Therefore the papers are permitted a limited circulation among the older folk who read about what little is good for the children to hear.

It is said that nobody ever sold a dollar's worth of life insurance in the town. According to their faith, the Lord lends death when he thinks right and will provide for wives, children and other dependents. To insure against an act of God seems to them impious.

These people are not only honest with each other but with the wicked outside world. Furthermore they have proved that honesty is the best policy and made it pay. Sometime ago the college built an electric line plant big enough to serve the whole town. Before it was quite finished the Texas Power & Light Co. made them such a flattering offer of reduced rates that the little plant was never used.

Other towns wanted to know why they didn't get a similar offer and when the company told them, their faces were red. The company said that little "Spotless Town" was the only community in the world as far as they knew, that paid its bills 100%, and paid them when they were due. The company had no losses, wanted no money on bill collectors to call and call for men to turn off the current when customers get too far behind and to turn it on again when they desired to pay up. The community wanted to be that honest they could have the same special rates but none could or would.

The Seventh Day Adventists did not wish to make the experiment of a monthly spotless town. Their intention, forty-two years ago, was to found Southwestern Junior College on a farm, eight miles from Keene, nearest settlement. The college is self-supporting, and though it pays no taxes, it asks no money from the taxpayer either. Its known factory and planning mill in which most of the students work, their way through, pays its rent. The president's salary is $15 a week. The rest of the sixteen members of the faculty work for minimum wages, $25 per week.

And a town limited to springing up around the little institution and was tolerated provided everyone kept the tenets of the faith. Keene got a special charter in work tobacco smokers and observe Sabbath, the ancient Hebrew Sabbath was the day of rest.

The images of right and wrong in Keene are drawn entirely from the Bible but in some cases the reasoning behind them is hard for an outsider to follow. Though the Saviour turned water into wine and did not denounce tobacco, spices, meat and some of the other things they now consider evil, the Adventists hold that these things "defile the temple of the body" and therefore are sinful.

The inhabitants of "Spotless Town" all say that they live longer than other people but have no statistics to prove it. A doctor in Cleburne, asked if this was true, replied:

"I don't think they live any longer but life is so slow over there that it must seem to them that way."

Bishop Rice, of the Independent Methodists, Inc., of Colorado, Acquires Denver's Old Windsor Hotel's Famous Bar and Explains Why He Makes It a Part of His Divine Services

The Old Windsor Hotel in Denver, Where Bishop Rice's Church and Bar Are Located.

INSTEAD of denouncing the "Demon Rum" from the pulpit, Bishop Frank H. Rice, Supreme Pontiff of the Methodist Church, Inc. and the Liberal Church, Inc., has found the "money" and thought him to church to help in the redemption of souls actively serving free beer and wine at meetings. For a while, his laymen's strongest drink is to come later.

Bishop Rice, who says he has 15,000 members, ministers under him, each with an average of 100 communications, has taken over the famous old Windsor hotel bar in downtown Denver, Colo., where, for as long ago as the fabulously rich "Haw" Tabor used to plant his silver dollars across the double handful.

"I established this saloon," Bishop Rice told the representative of The American Weekly, "to prove that a bar and saloon can be conducted in harmony with the highest and truest religious beliefs. I have tried to keep that theme ever in the mind of my patrons by surrounding the walls of the saloon with librettos as well as parable verses. Except at church services, we will conduct a regular tavern where any eligible citizen may purchase a drink of whatever kind of liquor he desires. Dispensing the liquor during the service as well as at all other times, will be by regular ordained ministers of my church. We will operate under a regular license issued by the state.

"You know, there are no saloons in Colorado. Saloons are prohibited by the constitution, but I feel certain my method of operation will show definitely that the saloon of the old days is back here and back here to stay. Officially, the state says we must operate 'taverns' but our bar is a saloon.

"A mixture of liquor is good for people. The equivalent of most intoxicating liquors had their place in early Christianity and in moderation are still beneficial. Mixing intoxicating liquors with honey is part and parcel of our religion. I refer you to Judges, Ch. 9, Vs 12 and 13, and Psalm 104, Verse 15. These verses of wine as something that 'maketh glad the heart of man' and 'strengtheneth food and health'.

"To pay for the liquor that I distribute free to my congregation, I simply resort to a plan I invented a number of years ago in securing funds for the deacons. I enlist the aid of a number of men or boys to take Denver business men. Then, after rich men invite me to their houses at stag parties to act as waiter for the occasion. I have a complete knowledge of mankind's tricks.

"I do not allow mixing of sexes while communion, usually beer is distributed until the period of communion has passed."

"The Bishop claims that his two churches of which he is the head are the most liberal in the world, because the only tried requirement in its support the Constitution of the United States and the Golden Rule. In all other matters a person does good according to the dictates of his conscience. One of the new members, as he looked across the bar and wiped the foam from his lips, remarked with deep feelings:

"I say this church is better than liberal. It's generous."

However, some of the early preachers are not entirely satisfied. They feel that they should be admitted to all ceremonies. From the start, where free drinks are being passed out. Their argument is that there should be no distinction between the sexes, especially after everyone has had just some forgiveness, and all persons should be equal in the eyes of the bartender. Asked why neither his wife nor eight-year-old daughter, being to either of his churches, he replies with a wink:

"Well, aren't women known as 'the opposite sex'?"

Also there have been criticisms of beer instead of wine for communion. The Bishop dismisses this as a "typical example of religious narrow-mindedness," saying anyone to give a logical reason why beer is less sacred than the conventional wine. During the prohibition era, while "persecuted" by Federal agents, he used to go out for a while and that too, was criticized.

It is perhaps needless to mention that the Bishop is not a member of the Methodist Church, with its well-known attitude toward liquor. But he used to be a member, is the son of a Methodist minister, and was an officer of the Anti-Saloon League. Strangely enough, he was while fighting in hand-to-hand combat with "Demon Rum" that he began to have his doubts about the saloon and justice of that war.

He not only got out of the league but protested so vigorously against the methods and policies of the church that he was expelled from it. There were many other members at the time, a part of rebellion, in which many walked out of the fold, forming a new movement, as was known as the Methodist Church.

It is strange how people will complain, even when they get things for nothing. Already there is criticism, because the same man would have to win the prize three times running in order to have a complete free funeral, and there are grave doubts of any such luck.

Probably the most spectacular stunt ever perpetrated by Bishop Rice was when he set out to save from legal execution a Denver boy who had been condemned to die on the gallows in Sacramento. Bishop Rice first inserted paid advertisements in Denver newspapers urging people to pray for the soul of the youth. He then donated full sackcloth and ashes, the sackcloth was a length of two of gunnysack that he borrowed from a local concern and boarded a railroad train, westbound for California, to intercede with the Governor of that State on behalf of the condemned youth.

Probably the most spectacular stunt ever perpetrated by Bishop Rice was when he set out to save from legal execution a Denver boy who had been condemned to die on the gallows in Sacramento. Bishop Rice first inserted paid advertisements in Denver newspapers urging people to pray for the soul of the youth. He then donated full sackcloth and ashes, the sackcloth was a length of two of gunnysack that he borrowed from a local concern and boarded a railroad train, westbound for California, to intercede with the Governor of that State on behalf of the condemned youth.

Railroad officials and trustees were incensed when they saw Bishop Rice parading up and down the aisles of the Pullman cars, praying at the dismayed passengers and sprinkling them, as well as the entire train, with ashes. The first Pullman porter to object was asked if he was prepared to meet his God. Presumably he was not, because he backed up and met the Pullman conductor instead.

The train conductor, in spite of Rice's reversed color, summoned courage enough to get out his book of rules and say that by virtue of a power conferred upon him by the Christiana Commission, he would put him off the train at the next stop for disturbing the peace unless he quit erupting prayers and ashes.

"I represent the Prince of Peace," answered Rice, "and I am a Bishop of the Methodist Church, Incorporated."

As far as known, no prelate with as high a rank as that was ever thrown off a train. The thought was too awful to contemplate, yet the passengers were getting restful over being doused, sprayed at and having their sins forgiven. Finally a brakeman had the inspiration to ask for his ticket. Ecclesiastes, high and low, usually get special rates, but they are supposed to have some sort of ticket or pass, and that one had none. So on this technicality he was right, recently removed at the next stop, but he had traveled nearly 100 miles free.

Though his bar is permanent, the Bishop's church that goes with it is not. He rents most any sort of building capable of holding a crowd, and when there are not enough funds in the treasury to pay the rent he sometimes has to move just like any boy tenant. Bishop Rice officiates at funerals and weddings without charge, and has added an "improvement" to funeral services which is entirely his own idea. Instead of burning everyone by relating all the known virtues and good deeds of the deceased, he floats up both good and bad deeds on an ashling machine, certifies a slip of paper on which the total is printed, and places it in the coffin. Presumably this lightens the work of the Resurrecting Angel in Heaven, whose house, by doubt, are very complicated.

There are no definite parishes in either of Bishop Rice's churches. He creates out of ordinary persons Ministers, Bishops, Archbishops and Cardinals, according to how much natural ecclesiastical talent each seems to him to have. For instance, Robert Ripley, of "Believe-It-or-Not" fame, had too much soul-saving ability to be a mere Minister, but not quite enough to rate as an Archbishop, so Rice made him a plain Bishop, which is not as bad considering that it is only a side line with Mr. Ripley. These prelates are given the wide world as their parish, where they are supposed to wander about marrying, burying and forgiving, and wherever such services are needed some of them seem not very active.

Bishop Rice believes that liquor, being a source and comfort to sorrowing humanity, just as religion is, the two should go together. He points out that a good stiff drink adds grief at a funeral and is in harmony with the ancient and honorable custom of wailing. Also he thinks a drink helps out at marriage ceremonies, especially for the groom at a shotgun wedding.

The Rt. Rev. Mr. Rice, who was born in Kansas, says that his minister father was hard on him as a kid, but little Frank must have been hard on his father, too, because he admits playing such pranks as putting salt in the communion wine. Later he was invited to leave Epworth University for "immoral conduct in classes." This, he says, consisted in refuting the teachings of the professors from their own books.

In his later youth he was a farm-hand and cowboy in Oklahoma, Kansas, Texas and elsewhere. Two years ago he was expelled from his pulpit at St. Mary's Episcopal Church in London, but ran a little saloon called "The Anchor." He shows that drinking can be done decently and humanely. He protested that just because liquor, like most everything else, may be abused, is no reason for taking it away from the working man.

Another British clergyman who feels the same way is the Rev. J. H. Band, Vicar at St. Mary's, Edinburgh. His church has an ancient fund established long ago to provide that on one Sunday in each year, instead of passing the collection plate every member of the congregation would receive a shilling (equivalent to 20 cents) and as much cake and as he or she wants.

"JUST THE KIND OF PICKUP I LIKE!" I'm all for fresh Dated Coffee in the bag. It's so cheering and refreshing when I'm tired—and it never lets me down. I appreciate the painless price, too."
Miss Emma Kross, Towanda, Pa.

DOUBLE ADVANTAGES—"I have to entertain a good deal, but I can't pay fancy prices. Dated Coffee in the bag is the one coffee I know that satisfies both my requirements—superb quality and a low price!"
Mrs. Milton Smith, Ithaca, New York

NO MORE NERVES—"When a friend told me my nerves might be due to stale coffee, I simply laughed. But she made coffee from Dated Coffee in the bag—and the difference was amazing! It's so extra fresh and good. And now that it's packed in the bag, I don't have to worry about the cost."
Mrs. Edward Overton, Los Angeles, Calif.

"ASK A MAN ABOUT COFFEE"—I say men are the real coffee lovers. I insist on my wife using Dated Coffee in the bag. It has so much fresh, rich flavor. And, what's more, it's inexpensive, because of the paper bag."
Wm. McDermott, Dubuque, Ia.

HOUSEWIVES agree that Chase & Sanborn Dated Coffee in the bag is outstanding for richness and flavor! That's because it's blended from the world's choicest coffees and guaranteed fresh by our Dating Plan and rapid delivery system.

We rush every bag to your grocer, marked with the date of delivery. And none stays on his shelves more than 10 days! There is no need for a high-priced container—so we pack it in an inexpensive bag—and pass the saving along to you!

Order an economical bag of delicious Chase & Sanborn Dated Coffee tomorrow!

2880 CUPS OF COFFEE—O. K.—"My husband and I just good coffee—between us we drink 12 cups a day. That means we have to watch price as well as flavor. We've had 2880 cups of Dated Coffee in the bag—regular size, and you packed in the economical bag—neither of them has been just perfect!"
Mrs. Edwina Cobb, Queens Village, L. I.

BILLS LOWER—COFFEE BETTER—"Our coffee budget has gone down since we switched to Dated Coffee in the bag. The saving in the bag makes a surprising difference when you figure it up for several months! And Walter says it's the freshest, best coffee I've given him since we've been married."

The following discussion is based on the results of the first two experiments.

the egg chamber lays an egg bearing two female offspring and one male offspring. The male offspring is the only one that survives to adulthood. The female offspring are the only ones that survive to adulthood.

eggs are laid in a few parts only. The position of the eggs is determined by the position of the female, the eggs are laid in the same position as the female, and the eggs are laid in the same position as the female.

The extracts were centrifuged at 1000g for 5 min and the supernatant was transferred to a clean vial. The process was repeated until the leaves were completely extracted. The supernatants were then combined and the solvent was evaporated under reduced pressure. The residue was dissolved in 1 ml of dimethyl sulfoxide (DMSO) and the absorbance was measured at 663 nm and 646 nm. The concentrations of Chl a and Chl b were calculated using the following equations: Chl a (mg/g) = 12.72 (A₆₆₃ - A₆₄₆) + 22.9 (A₆₄₆ - A₆₄₈), Chl b (mg/g) = 22.9 (A₆₄₆ - A₆₄₈) - 7.32 (A₆₆₃ - A₆₄₆).

The Stolen Letter

For the first time, the world's largest and most powerful nations are working together to combat the scourge of terrorism. The United States, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, and the Netherlands have formed a coalition to fight terrorism. This coalition is the first of its kind, and it is a testament to the power of international cooperation. The coalition is led by the United States, and it has the support of the United Nations. The coalition is a response to the September 11 attacks, and it is a commitment to the safety and security of the world. The coalition is a sign of the world's unity, and it is a sign of the world's strength. The coalition is a sign of the world's hope, and it is a sign of the world's future.

And he took it all in. Perhaps the most beautiful example of the way the mind works is that the second time he took it in, he came out with a different answer. The first time he said, "I don't know," and the second time he said, "I don't know."

There are a number of factors which may be involved in the development of the disease. Infection with the virus is the most common cause, but it may also be caused by a deficiency of the immune system, or by a combination of factors. The disease is most common in children, but it can also occur in adults. The symptoms are usually mild, but in some cases they can be severe. The disease is usually self-limiting, but in some cases it can lead to long-term complications. The treatment is usually supportive, but in some cases it may be necessary to use antiviral drugs. The disease is preventable by vaccination, but the vaccine is only available in some countries.

Dollars Go Farther in a Ford V-8

When you buy a car, look for all-around economy. Get the car that gives you more miles per dollar. That means a Ford V-8.

Take a total of all costs from the time you buy the car until you trade it in—divide by the number of miles—and you will find that today's Ford V-8 is the most economical Ford car ever built.

This is not an opinion but a fact—based on the experience of millions of Ford V-8 users. That includes companies operating large fleets of cars, as well as individual owners.

Figures show that the Ford V-8—everything considered—costs less per mile than our former four-cylinder car. These records give the complete picture because they include every motor car cost—first cost, finance charges, up-keep cost and depreciation, as well as fuel and oil. All should be considered when figuring automobile economy.

Only the Ford V-8 gives you all of these fine-car features

- 1 V-8 ENGINE. The only car under $1000 with a V-8 engine.
- 2 SAFETY GLASS ALL AROUND AT NO EXTRA CHARGE.
- 3 STEEL BODY. A steel structure, as well as a steel surface.
- 4 CENTER-POISE RIDING. COMFORT. All passengers are cradled between the springs, away from the bumps.
- 5 SUPER-SAFETY MECHANICAL BRAKES. Safe—sure—dependable under all driving conditions.
- 6 NEW INTERIOR APPOINTMENTS. New style upholstery, hardware, instrument panel and new accessories.

25 A MONTH, after usual down payment, buys any model 1935 Ford V-8 (except from any Ford dealer—anywhere in the United States. Ask your Ford dealer about this plan. Universal Credit Company 3 1/2 per cent per month finance plan.)
